OLDMAN – Off the Record

올드만 – 기록되지 않은 기억

An anonymous hacker leaks the footage the world was never meant to see: after a pandemic "cure" that promised eternity, the old were discarded as empty shells — until one of them came back.

SYNOPSIS

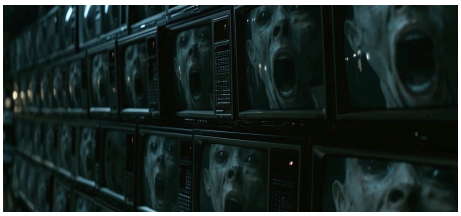

OLDMAN – Off the Record is a found-footage short assembled from leaked surveillance feeds, broadcasts and recordings, narrated by the hacker who stole them. The global pandemic is officially over. A corporation called Biolion did not sell a cure — it sold forever. But inside the bodies of those who took both the vaccine and the drug, something began to turn. The old were the first to change, and the first to be thrown away. One of them did not burn. The cameras of the whole city began looking for a single man, and by the time they found him, his blood was already falling as rain.

DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

I wanted to make a film about the people a system throws away first. OLDMAN takes the phrase "a life already finished" literally: a world that recycles its elders as fuel, and one old man who refuses to burn. Almost every image was generated with AI, each slightly different from the last. Instead of hiding that, I made it the point: these are rumors and fragments stolen by a hacker, and nobody's memory of Oldman agrees.
